

Inspiring news for community leaders from the ten parks of SeaWorld Parks & Entertainment

Rescued Turtles Find Warmth at SeaWorld

This winter, harsh weather blasts are taking a toll on endangered sea turtles off the coasts of Florida and New England. Over the last two months, SeaWorld Orlando's Rescue Team has been working tirelessly to care for 55 cold-stunned sea turtles after they were rescued from freezing waters. Read more

SeaWorld Comes to Aid of Baby Sperm Whale

The SeaWorld Rescue Team is on call 24 hours a day. Recently they rescued a baby sperm whale at midnight after it had stranded on a rocky beach near San Diego. Fighting the pounding surf and darkness, the team was able to guide the young whale into open water about a quarter mile off the coast, where it quickly swam into the ocean. Read more.

Busch Gardens Works to Conserve Wildlife for Future Generations

A recent birthday signified a great step in Busch Gardens Tampa Bay's work to preserve endangered Western lowland gorillas. Bolingo, the first gorilla born at the park, turned five years old. He is part of the Species Survival Plan, a program between the park and the Association of Zoos and Aquariums to conserve threatened or endangered species. Read more.

SeaWorld Brings Rescue Message to Schools

SeaWorld's Rescue Team and their animal friends are teaching students across the U.S. how they, too, can help wildlife. Each of the three parks are visiting schools in 13 cities, teaching kids the importance, and affect, of everyday actions such as conserving water, picking up litter and participating in local beach cleanups. Read more.

Busch Gardens Williamsburg Helps to Conserve Wolves

At Busch Gardens Williamsburg, endangered gray wolves serve as conservation ambassadors, and guests and employees join forces to preserve this species. The park donates a portion of every "Wolf Training Spotlight Tour" to wolf conservation projects, while employees have raised thousands of dollars through the "Spare Wolves" bowling fundraiser. Read more

Sesame Place Spreads Cheer at Children's Hospital

Hospitalization is a difficult time for families. To lift the spirits of young patients, Cookie Monster and his Sesame Place pals recently visited the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia. They put on a show in the hospital's main lobby for all of the children and parents to enjoy. The visit was in partnership with The Joshua Kahan Fund. Read more.

